ISO Indiscriminate, Gullible Looters for Friendship, Revenge

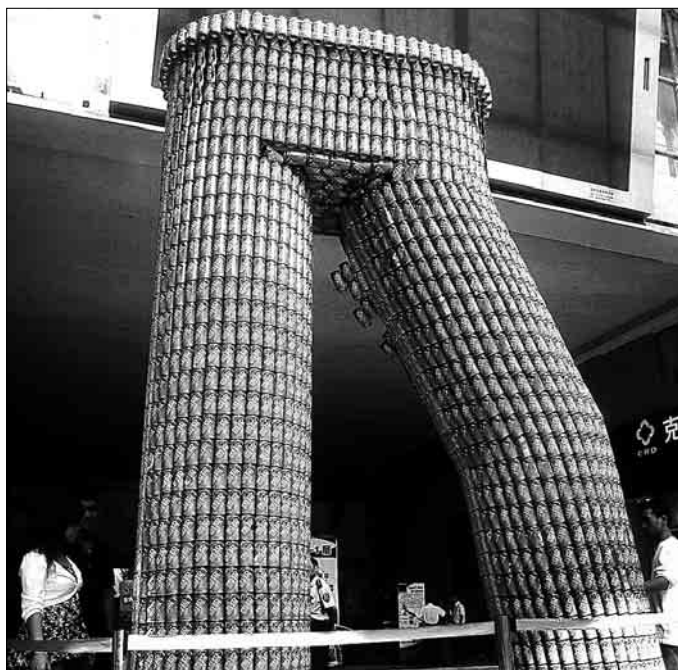

A Tacoma, Wash., woman accused of placing an online ad that led to her aunt's house being ransacked pleaded guilty Monday. Prosecutors said Nichole Marie Blackwell, 28, maliciously posted an ad on Craigslist inviting the public to "take whatever you want." The ad was titled "everything free," and said, "nothing is off-limits." People took the ad at face value and carried off nearly everything, including the kitchen sink. Blackwell told investigators that she posted the ad to get back at her aunt, who'd been feuding with Blackwell's mother. (AP)

'Pink Hydrangeas Killed My Parents!'

The wedding was lovely, except for the flowers: They were the wrong color. So says bride Elana Glatt, who has sued the florist for alleged breach of contract. She says Posy Floral Design in Manhattan substituted pastel pink hydrangeas for the dark rust ones she had specified. "The use of predominantly pastel centerpieces had a significant impact on the look of the room and was entirely inconsistent with the vision [of] the plaintiffs," Glatt, a lawyer, said in the lawsuit, filed on behalf of herself, her husband and his mother. The flowers cost $27,435.14. The lawsuit asks for more than $400,000. (AP)

Of Course, His Truck Plays 'Helter Skelter'

A Portsmouth, Va., ice cream vendor who's been fined repeatedly for playing music from his truck has challenged the city's regulations stipulating that frozen-treat vendors use only a bell—and for only three seconds or less. Claudio Jose Sanchez appeared in court Friday to seek the dismissal of a recent charge. His attorney argued that Portsmouth's prohibition is unconstitutional and a restriction on commercial speech. The judge is giving the city several weeks to respond. (AP)

Dalai Lama Brushes Off Criticism

China is angry at U.S. for awarding medal to exiled spiritual leader

WASHINGTON | The Dalai Lama, after meeting privately Tuesday with President Bush, brushed off China's furious reaction to U.S. celebrations this week in his honor.

"That always happens," the exiled spiritual leader of Tibet's Buddhists said with a laugh, speaking to reporters gathered outside his downtown Washington hotel.

The Dalai Lama speaks with reporters after a making a trip to the White House.

The White House defended the meeting in the president's residence and dismissed Beijing's warning that the talks and the awarding of the Congressional Gold Medal to him on Wednesday would damage relations between the United States and China.

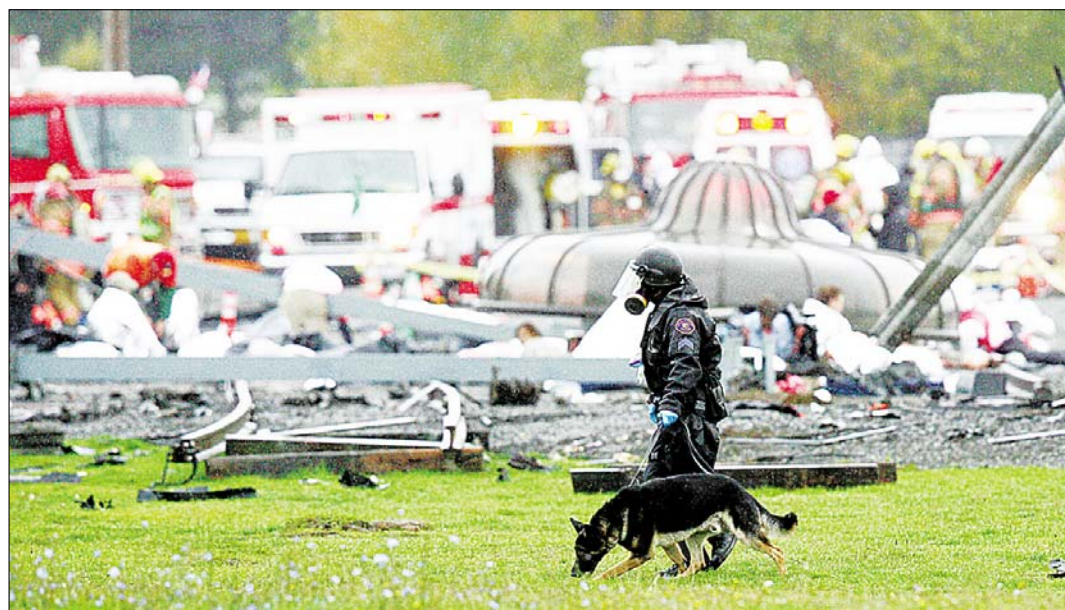

The Dalai Lama is hailed in much of the world as a figure of moral authority, but Beijing reviles the 1989 Nobel Peace Prize laureate and claims he seeks to destroy China's sovereignty by pushing for independence for Tibet.

No media access was allowed to Bush's meeting with the Dalai Lama in the private residence section of the White House. In an exception to normal practice, the Bush administration did not release any pictures of the meeting, nor did it put out a formal statement on it.

"We in no way want to stir the pot and make China feel that we are poking a stick in their eye for a country that we have a lot of relationships with on a variety of issues," said press secretary Dana Perino.

TSA Changes Screening Rule For Headwear

WASHINGTON | Air passengers will no longer have to remove bulky headwear such as turbans at screening checkpoints if doing so makes them uncomfortable. A revised federal guideline, effective Oct. 27, gives airport screeners the option to pat down headwear at the metal detector if a passenger does not want to remove it for personal reasons.

Passengers wearing bulky headwear can be subjected to a mix of screening, such as pat-downs, X-ray devices and portal machines. If an item still cannot be ruled out as a potential threat, the screener still has the option to request that the passenger remove it, but only in a private screening area. (AP)

Dems Blast Response to Jena Case

House lawmakers say Justice Department should have intervened

WASHINGTON | Democratic lawmakers denounced federal authorities Tuesday for not intervening in the Jena Six case, citing racist noose-hanging incidents far beyond the small Louisiana town where a school attack garnered national attention.

The House Judiciary Committee held a hearing with federal officials and community activists examining the case of the six black teenagers charged with the beating of a white student. The incident happened after nooses were hung from a tree on a high school campus there — a symbol of the lynching violence of the segregation era.

Rep. Sheila Jackson Lee, D-Texas, criticized the U.S. attorney for Louisiana's western district for not intervening in a case against six black teens in Jena, La.

Spoiling for a Fight

→ It may have been a coincidence, but after the arrival of the Rev. Al Sharpton, a thoughtful session on the Jena Six case quickly turned into an attack session. | A Section

IN The Washington Post

Democratic lawmakers, many of them black, blasted federal authorities for staying out of the local prosecutor's case against the six, particularly that of Mychal Bell, who is currently in jail after a judge decided he violated the terms of his probation for a previous conviction.

"Shame on you," Rep. Sheila Jackson Lee, D-Texas, said to Justice Department officials, directing most of her fury at Donald Washington, the U.S. attorney for Louisiana's western district — and the first black person to hold that position.

"As a parent, I'm on the verge of tears," Jackson Lee said.

"Why didn't you intervene?" she asked repeatedly, raising her voice and jabbing her finger in the air as some in the audience began to applaud.

Committee chairman Rep. John Conyers, D-Mich., called for quiet before Washington spoke.

"I was also offended; I, too, am an African-American," Washington told the panel. "I did intervene; I did engage the district attorney. At the end of the day, there are only certain things that the United States attorney can do."

The Department of Justice has created a task force to handle noose-hanging investigations in five states. It investigated the Jena matter but decided not to prosecute because the federal government typically does not bring hate crimes charges against juveniles, Washington said. DEVLIN BARRETT (AP)

Rape Suspect Is Arrested

Nev. man accused of raping girl on tape caught in traffic stop

LAS VEGAS | A fugitive accused in the videotaped molestation of a 3-year-old girl was arrested quietly during a traffic stop, telling the officer, "I'm tired of running," police said.

Chester "Chet" Arthur Stiles, 37, was scheduled for a hearing Wednesday. He was pulled over late Monday in Henderson for not having a license plate and admitted his identity after police said his license looked suspicious, authorities said.

"This is an answer to our prayers, actually," Nye County Sheriff Tony DeMeo said. "He should be off the street. In our opinion, he is a predator."

Stiles had been wanted since

Chester Arthur Stiles was pulled over by police for not having a license plate.

Oct. 5 on warrants issued for 21 felony charges in connection with the acts seen on the videotape. The charges include lewdness with a minor, sexual assault and attempted sexual assault, Las Vegas police

Capt. Vincent Cannito said.

The videotape, found in the rural Nevada town of Pahrump last month, had prompted an equally intense search for the young girl who appeared in it. Police with little to go on had encouraged news organizations to broadcast her haunting image. When the now-7-year-old was found on Sept. 28, authorities shifted their resources to finding Stiles.

Henderson police Officer Mike Dye said he stopped Stiles at about 7 p.m. on a busy thoroughfare just outside Las Vegas driving a white sedan with no license plates.

"He said, 'I'm Chester Stiles, the guy you're looking for,'" Dye said. "He said, 'I'm tired of running.'"

Police had received hundreds of tips on Stiles, who they believed might be dangerous and possibly armed. KEN RITTER (AP)

Putin Warns Against Attacking Iran

In Tehran, Russian leader seeks to limit U.S. ties to Caspian

TEHRAN, IRAN | Vladimir Putin issued a veiled warning Tuesday against any attack on Iran as he began the first visit by a Kremlin leader to Tehran in six decades — a mission reflecting Russian-Iranian efforts to curb U.S. influence.

He also suggested Moscow and Tehran should have a veto on Western plans for new pipelines to carry oil and natural gas from the Caspian Sea, using routes that would bypass Russian soil and break the Kremlin's monopoly on energy deliveries from the region.

Putin came to Tehran for a summit of the five nations bordering the Caspian, but his visit was aimed more at strengthening efforts to blunt U.S. economic and military ties in the area. Yet he also refused to set a date for completing Iran's first nuclear reactor, trying to avoid an outright show of support for Iran's defiance over its nuclear program.

Iranian President Ahmadinejad and Russian President Putin meet Tuesday.

Putin strongly warned outside powers against use of force in the region, a clear reference to the United States, which many in Iran fear will attack over the West's suspicions that the Iranians are secretly trying to develop nuclear weapons.

Iranian President Mahmoud Ahmadinejad made similar comments. "We are saying that no [Caspian] nations should offer their territory to outside powers for aggression or any military action against any of the Caspian states," Putin said. VLADIMIR ISACHENKOV (AP)

Iraqis Eye Diplomacy With Turks

Sunni VP dispatched in hopes of preventing a cross-border attack

ANKARA, TURKEY | Iraq urged Turkey not to send troops across the border to fight rebel Kurds, dispatching the Sunni vice president to Ankara on Tuesday and calling for "a diplomatic solution" to tensions that have sent oil prices soaring.

Tareq al-Hashemi, one of two Iraqi vice presidents, met with Prime Minister Recep Tayyip Erdogan and other senior officials. The Turkish Parliament was expected to approve a motion Wednesday allowing the government to order a cross-border attack over the next year.

"The passage of the motion in Parliament does not mean that an operation will be carried out at once," Erdogan said Tuesday. "Turkey would act with common sense and determination when necessary and when the time is ripe."

Ali al-Dabbagh, the spokesman for Iraqi Prime Minister Nouri al-Maliki, said the government would not tolerate violence from the separatist rebels but he urged the Turks to "seek a diplomatic solution and not a military one in dealing with the terrorist threats that target it." (AP)

Brits Pull Teeth Over Dentist Shortage

LONDON | A shortage of National Health Service dentists in England has led some people to pull out their own teeth — or use super glue to stick crowns back on, a study says.

Many dentists abandoned Britain's publicly funded health care system after reforms backfired, leaving a growing number of Britons without access to affordable care.

"I was not surprised to hear those horror stories," said Celestine Bridgeman, 41, of London. "Trying to find good NHS dentists is like trying to hit the lottery because the service is underfunded."

The National Health Service provides care to the vast majority of Britain's people, often for free. Unlike doctors who work for the health service, dentists work on a contract basis and can leave whenever they wish.

The survey of 5,212 patients and 750 dentists in England found 6 percent of patients resorted to self-treatment, including one person who extracted 14 of his teeth with pliers.

Other patients reported using super glue on crowns after they popped off, the study said.

'Damaged' Bhutto Back in Limelight

Former Pakistani PM to return from exile with tarnished image

ISLAMABAD, PAKISTAN | Benazir Bhutto's return from exile could carry Pakistan further along the road to civilian rule. However, her stance as a defender of democracy has been undermined by recent negotiations with the country's military strongman, President Gen. Pervez Musharraf.

Bhutto, two-time prime minister and scion of Pakistan's pre-eminent political family, is expected to arrive in Karachi on Thursday, eight years after she left the country to avoid arrest on graft charges. Musharraf has dropped the charges against her in exchange for her support.

If Bhutto's Pakistan People's Party does well in parliamentary elections in January, she and Musharraf could make an alliance — both share a pro-U.S. view against terrorism.

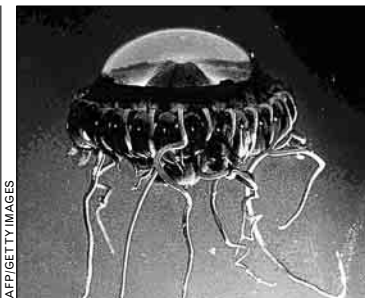

ANTICIPATED ARRIVAL: Supporters of former Pakistani Prime Minister Benazir Bhutto celebrate her impending return in Karachi. She is set to arrive on Thursday.

The government has asked Bhutto to delay her comeback because of fears of attacks from Islamic extremists. However, plans are going ahead for a celebration that her party hopes will draw 1 million people onto the streets of the country's biggest city.

Bhutto is launching her comeback at a time of particular uncertainty. Musharraf has vowed to quit the powerful post of army chief if he secures another five-year presidential term.

Musharraf swept the elections on Oct. 6. However, the Supreme Court is still examining opposition challenges to his eligibility for another term and a corruption amnesty he granted last week to Bhutto and other politicians. The amnesty has drawn fierce criticism.

"Musharraf has been badly damaged; Benazir has been even more badly damaged, perhaps fatally. That's the only silver lining," columnist Humayun Gauhar wrote in the Nation. STEPHEN GRAHAM (AP)

Uninsured Find New Plan in Md.

Howard County takes gym membership approach to health care

COLUMBIA, MD. | Officials in Howard County have come up with a unique approach to aiding the uninsured, one they hope will be copied nationwide.

Those without coverage will be offered the opportunity to pay $50 to $85 per month, based on their income, for access to primary health care using a participating doctor or clinic, an arrangement county officials liken to joining a gym.

"That's exactly our metaphor," said Dr. Peter Beilenson, the county's health commissioner. "You're paying fees to join a health club with certain services."

The monthly fees, up to $115 for a couple making 300 percent of the federal poverty level, provide six visits to a primary care physician per year, discounted prescriptions, free immunizations, preventive health screenings and inpatient care at Howard County General Hospital.

The county's plan, scheduled to begin in July, will not require employer participation and will be funded by participants, businesses, foundations and government, mostly with money already in the current health care system. (AP)

Fenty to Announce Taxi Fare Plan

Tourism official calls D.C. cab system worst in the U.S., outdated

WASHINGTON | Mayor Adrian Fenty is scheduled to announce Wednesday whether city taxicabs will switch to meters or keep the current zone system. A decision one way or the other is required by a provision written by Sen. Carl Levin, D-Mich., a long time proponent of switching to meters.

The map used for calculating fares in the zone system consists of 22 concentric areas radiating out from a central downtown zone.

Each time a zone boundary is crossed, the fare goes up a few dollars. Surcharges are added for stops, rush hour travel and extra riders. The base price for a ride within one zone — whether it's a few blocks or a few miles — is $6.50

Fenty, whose office declined to comment on the upcoming decision, can stick with the current system or switch to the time and distance meters used in most cities. A third option — a "zone-fare calculator" — is also on the table. About 100 taxis owned by the Yellow Cab Company of D.C. are already using this method, which relies on the Global Positioning System to track movement between the zones and provide the customer with a detailed receipt.

Many proponents of dropping the zone system say it hurts the the $52 billion-per-year tourism industry.

"Universally, the hospitality industry wants to go to time and distance meters," said Bill Hanbury, president of the Washington, D.C., Convention and Tourism Corporation. "Our cab system is abysmal. It's one of the worst in the country," he said. "We get a lot of negative responses from visitors, that it's confusing, that they think they're being ripped off, and it's outdated. It needs to be fixed right away."

Wheels Faulted in Metro Derailment

WASHINGTON | Poor wheel maintenance procedures and internal disagreements over how to balance a problematic fleet of rail cars contributed to the Jan. 7 derailment of a Metro train that injured 23, the National Transportation Safety

Board said Tuesday.

The board also found the derailment could have been prevented if Metro had installed a guardrail at the sharp curve where one rail car went off the tracks. The accident caused $3.8 million worth of damage. (AP)

Amid Tension in Iraq, Oil Prices Hit Record

Crude rises to $88 per barrel as fears grow over Turkish incursion

NEW YORK | Oil futures rallied to a new record of more than $88 per barrel Tuesday on concerns about disruptions to Middle Eastern crude supplies and a growing view that domestic supplies aren't sufficient to meet fourth-quarter demand.

Traders are concerned that a Turkish incursion into Iraq in search of Kurdish rebels could disrupt crude supplies from northern Iraq.

"Whenever there is any escalation in political tensions in the Middle East, oil markets become concerned," said David Moore, a commodity strategist at the Commonwealth Bank of Australia in Sydney.

On Tuesday, Turkey's prime minister said Monday's decision to ask Parliament for permission to pursue the rebels was not a sign Turkish forces will act immediately.

Treasury secretary says ongoing slump is major risk to economy

WASHINGTON | Treasury Secretary Henry Paulson called Tuesday for an aggressive response to deal with an unfolding housing crisis that he said presents a significant risk to the economy.

In the administration's most detailed reaction to the steepest housing slump in 16 years, Paulson said the government and the financial industry should provide immediate help for homeowners trying to refinance current mortgages before they reset at much higher rates.

He also called for an overhaul of laws and regulations governing mortgage lending to halt abusive practices that contributed to the current crisis.

"Let me be clear: Despite strong economic fundamentals, the housing decline is still unfolding, and I view it as the most significant current risk to our economy," Paulson said in a speech delivered at Georgetown University's law school. (AP)

Uncorked Connection

On speeding trains, Champagne country is a leisurely ride away

DESTINATIONS | After a Paris breakfast of café and croissant, how about lunch and a glass of bubbly in France's Champagne region?

Thanks to a new high-speed train line, Reims, the ancient heart of Champagne country, is now just 45 minutes from Paris — less time than it takes to cross the French capital during rush hour.

Running at up to 199 mph, France's network of bullet trains — known as the TGV, or Train à Grande Vitesse (high-speed train) — is shrinking the country. Its newest line, the TGV Est, puts eastern France on the daytripper's map, slashing travel times to the line's 30-plus destinations in eastern France and Germany.

The previous 90-minute trip to Reims has been cut by half. Colmar, a picture postcard town, is now three hours from Paris, down from nearly five hours before.

the train as you arrive in Reims, the drink's enormous influence on the city is immediately palpable: More than an occasional, celebratory beverage, here, bubbly is a way of life.

Decorative bunches of stone grapes adorn the stately bourgeois mansions in the historic center, and architectural details on City Hall and even the famous cathedral of Reims — where generations of French monarchs were anointed — pay homage to the sparkling wine.

Reims is the headquarters for many of France's main Champagne houses, including luxury labels Veuve Clicquot, Ruinart and Pommery. Most labels offer tours of their cellars with English-speaking guides several times a day.

Taking a taxi is the best way to get to the cellars, which are clustered a good 45-minute walk from the train station in the residential neighborhoods south of the city center.

While in the cellar-filled southern part of town, be sure to swing by Saint Remi Basilica, an 11th-century church that holds the remains of the city's most celebrated native son, Remi of Reims, a fifth-century archbishop credited with converting France to Catholicism.

A host of restaurants around the cathedral serve up delectable local dishes like "pied de porc," or pig's foot, a traditional specialty that washes down well with — surprise, surprise — a glass of champagne.

And after that, the high-speed train ride back to Paris ought to go even faster. JENNY BARCHFIELD (AP)

Colorado Is Definitely Rocking Now

It took a lifetime, but the Rockies are finally in the World Series

BASEBALL PLAYOFFS | It's October in Colorado. The Broncos are playing. Snow showers are in the forecast. The leaves are turning red and yellow and brown.

The dominant color in the Mile High City these days, though, is purple.

The Rockies, crazy as it sounds, are in the World Series.

Sad-sack losers almost all their 15 seasons of existence, the Rockies have won 21 of 22 games and seven in a row in the playoffs.

Suddenly, it's cool to wear a black and purple Rockies cap around town. First baseman Todd Helton is a bigger star than the Broncos quarterback, Jay Cutler.

Yes, Denver has always been a football town — a city that attached itself to the Broncos and married much of its self-esteem and hope to heroes wearing orange and blue.

But in between those football-filled autumns, there had to be something to do to pass the time.

The long-awaited arrival of the baseball turned out to be almost as cruel as its longtime absence had been for Denver. The Rockies slowly slipped into obscurity and irrelevance brought about by poor management, bad decisions and thoroughly unlovable players.

Other expansion teams, Florida and Arizona, won the World Series.

Colorado bought a humidor — not for cigars, victory or otherwise, but for baseballs. That was 2002. The number of ungainly 12-11 games declined, but the bottom line — wins and losses — didn't improve.

"We had season tickets for a long time," said Karen Brennan of Castle Rock, an 85-mile round trip from the stadium. "We went for the first five years. The progress of the team and having to drive made us give up the season tickets."

But Brennan is back now, and so are many fans who once left the Rockies behind. The turnstiles are rocking again, and people come for the baseball. Not to watch the Cubs or the Yankees or Barry Bonds or some other visitor. To watch the Rockies.

The World Series is coming to Denver. How crazy does that sound?

Brady Has Numbers to Go With Rings

Patriots QB is known as a winner, but now he's putting up TDs, too

NFL | Randy Moss laughed when someone asked him how Tom Brady compares to Daunte Culpepper, with whom Moss spent his formative years.

"No one compares to Tom," he replied.

Moss' comment came after the New England Patriots took down Dallas 48-27 last Sunday in the much-ballyhooed battle of two 5-0 teams. Even for as decorated a quarterback as Brady, this was a breakout game that included a career-high five touchdown passes, giving him 21 for the season. Brady is the first QB to throw for at least three touchdowns in each of the first six games of a season.

"I think this is the most comfortable I've felt," Brady says. "For eight years I've put a lot of time and effort into trying to get things the way I want them. There's a lot that goes into throwing, the mechanics of it. It's not just coincidence that you complete certain passes that maybe you struggled with in the past."

Brady insists he'd rather have wins than records.

Now Brady is both winning and putting up numbers. Those 21 TDs in six games extrapolate to 56 for the season, seven past Peyton Manning's record.

Last week's game in Dallas was his 100th NFL start and he's still just 30, young for a quarterback.

"I was hoping to get to 10," he said last week when he was reminded of it. "But 100. That's good."

PICKUP: Charles Woodson, left, helped Green Bay come back in the second half to beat the Redskins 17-14 by scooping up a Santana Moss fumble and scoring.

Redskins Can't Win Consistently

Since '04, Washington has put together only 2 long winning streaks

REDSKINS | The story line of the Washington Redskins' loss in Green Bay is a typical one for the team. The Redskins arrived in Green Bay riding a 34-3 thrashing of Detroit and went out and dominated the Packers in the first half. Then, on a misty day and a slick field, the offense failed in the second half and the Redskins lost, 17-14.

Twice this season, the Redskins (3-2) have made early statements of intent after victories over NFC opponents, only to blow second-half leads the following week and lose games they might have won.

Since Coach Joe Gibbs and his staff took over in 2004, the Redskins have just two stretches of three wins or more — a three-game run to open the 2005 season and a five-game streak to close out 2005. They seemed poised for a third such streak last month, opening 2-0 and leading a then-winless New York, 17-3, at home at the half.

But they were outscored 21-0 in the second half. The Redskins rebounded against Detroit, then relapsed at Green Bay.

For players and coaches, the outcomes have become far too familiar, but there is no simple solution to the pattern, they say. Gibbs and the coaches continue to emphasize the importance of each game and attempt to steel the team against letdowns. Still, the tendency to falter after each triumph persists.

"We can't afford to give games away and not make plays in crucial situations like we did Sunday," said tailback Ladell Betts. "We're just not at that level where we can afford to do that."

Under Gibbs, the Redskins are 24-29 in 53 regular-season games, with eight victories coming during two winning streaks in 2005. In the other 45 games, the Redskins have won back-to-back games twice.

Frequently, the loss came because the team let leads slip away: The Redskins have lost 12 games despite having a halftime lead since 2004, most in the NFL, and it's happened six of nine times since last October.

"In general, we all knew what was at stake [Sunday], just like this coming week," Gibbs said. "We say, 'Hey, this is how important this is,' and I think our guys knew it."

Springs' Dad Hospitalized in a Coma

Redskins cornerback leaves team to be with his ailing father, 50

NFL | Former Dallas Cowboys running back Ron Springs has been hospitalized in a coma, more than seven months after receiving a kidney donated by ex-teammate Everson Walls.

The Redskins said Tuesday that cornerback Shawn Springs, son of the 50-year-old Springs, has left the team to be with his father.

"[Shawn] has flown down there — it's a very tough time for them because I think it's very, very serious," Redskins coach Joe Gibbs said.

It wasn't immediately clear what caused Ron Springs, who has diabetes, to lapse into a coma or when he was hospitalized. Calls to the family weren't returned.

Springs played eight seasons in the NFL, six with the Cowboys and two in Tampa Bay, before retiring after the 1986 season. He was drafted in the fifth round by the Cowboys out of Ohio State.

This summer, Ron and Shawn Springs visited several cities in a campaign to increase awareness of diabetes. PAUL J. WEBER (AP)

Unbeatens Share Weak Schedules

Except South Florida, football's top teams haven't played winners

COLLEGE FOOTBALL | Kansas, Hawaii, Arizona State, Ohio State, Boston College, South Florida.

Sounds like the field at the Maui Invitational.

They are, in reality, the remaining unbeatens in major college football. It's mid-October, and six of 119 teams have navigated their way to a perfect record in this stormiest of college football seasons. They're a combined 40-0.

But what do the six unbeatens have in common, aside from unbeaten records?

Time zones ... no.

Tradition ... no. South Florida moved to college football's top level in 2001.

Rankings ... no. They range from No. 1 (Ohio State) to No. 17 (Hawaii).

Chalk their records up to a combination of talent, coaching, parity and forgiving schedules. Or maybe "forgiving" is too kind.

The NCAA ranks schedules in a variety of ways, but the most telling is based on a team's previous opponents.

By that measure, South Florida's schedule ranks 12th. Among the other unbeatens, the next-toughest schedule belongs to Ohio State at No. 72. Arizona State ranks 84th, Boston College 92nd and Kansas 100th.

Hawaii has played the easiest schedule so far, according to the NCAA — and the Warriors had to go into overtime to beat Louisiana Tech and San Jose State.

But we shouldn't mock perfection. Salute these half-dozen teams for what they've achieved so far — bowl eligibility, or close to it.

"It's extremely hard," Ohio State coach Jim Tressel said on Tuesday. "It doesn't happen very often. Sometimes the ball bounces your way and sometimes it doesn't."

Microsoft, Ford Sync Up for Focus

Voice-activated car system can read text messages to driver

TALKING CAR | There I was, driving down the road and talking to the car.

The 2008 Ford Focus is the first car on the market with a factory-installed, Microsoft-developed, voice-activated system that can read text messages off BlackBerries and similar devices as the car travels — with both of the driver's hands on the steering wheel.

The new Sync system, as it's called, is the most attention-getting new feature of the redesigned Focus for 2008. But Ford's smallest car also has new, upscale styling with a prominent chrome-colored grille outside and a cleanly designed dashboard inside, a bit more power in the four-cylinder engine, new seats, more standard safety equipment and a retuned suspension.

While it's surprising that the Sync voice control system debuts in a low-priced, small car rather than a pricey luxury model, it will be seen elsewhere soon enough. Ford Motor Co. officials plan to put Sync in all Lincolns and many other Ford vehicles.

While the look is new and attractive on the Focus, the underlying front-wheel-drive platform remains from the old car, so this doesn't qualify as a new-generation model.

Still, it's surprising what a stiffer, lighter body and a smartly reworked suspension can do, especially when matched to a more precise rack-and-pinion steering system.

The test Focus Coupe held its line and its composure impressively on curves, turns and hilly roads, even as I moved along briskly. The car's motions were predictable, and the overall feeling in this small car was "steady as she goes" even as I neared the handling limits.

I especially enjoyed the steering, which didn't require constant adjustments even on long sweeping curves. It was easy to pick the best gearing to maintain a good pace, even if the overall power didn't feel exactly sporty. ANN M. JOB (AP)

Roses to Revolvers

'Slash' chronicles the career and exploits of a metal heavyweight

HARDCORE | He was the chain-smoking, Jack Daniels-drinking guitarist for one of the most explosive bands in history. But in his memoir, "Slash," out Oct. 30 via HarperEntertainment, the former Guns N' Roses member wants to set the record straight. Fans can take note: Riots, overdoses and controversies all make appearances. There are also surprises, from who dubbed him "Slash" to what it was like living with Axl Rose in their rehearsal space.

In the book, you mention that you felt rock biographies were inaccurate. How did you go about setting the tone to avoid this?

I've been approached about doing a book for probably all the wrong reasons so many times, I couldn't validate it in my own mind. For one, it seemed very self-indulgent, very self-centered and very final — and I have no plans of retiring. Finally, I started to realize all this Guns hype that goes on ... it's inaccurate, and most isn't even inaccurate; it's just made up. I got fed up with it. [The book will] answer a lot of these questions. I just figured, "Be as honest as possible."

HE'S AN AUTHOR! Slash took a break from rocking it hard to write his memoir, titled (wait for it), "Slash." The book about the metal star's life is due out Oct. 30.

Drugs and drinking are a big part of the story. How did it feel to see this down on paper?

A lot of that stuff I came back and cut out because I didn't want it to be one of those books that basically bragged about how hardcore [we were], blah, blah, blah. Especially nowadays, [because] a lot of musicians and rock bands have this badge they wear that says that they can party really hard, and I hate that. But I probably talk more about that than I actually talk about music. The music was sort of a natural thing you don't have to talk about, but chemical abuse was sort of every living, breathing moment.

This go with Velvet Revolver, are there plans to add dates? Are you writing new material?

We have Japan and Australia booked for November and December, and we'll probably be heading to Europe at the beginning of the year. We're going until the end of next summer, for sure. We just got started touring, so I can't say that we're actively working on the new record, but I've got my recording apparatus on my guitar in my room. That's where I start putting ideas down. MOLLY BROWN (BILLBOARD)

Comedian Drew Carey began hosting "The Price Is Right" on Monday.

Drew Carey fits the kitschy mold of his new daytime gig

HOST | I am almost certainly the worst judge in the world of "The Price Is Right." Don't watch. Never have. Never will. A highfalutin TV critic would much rather watch Shakespearean-like drama "Lost" or "Battlestar Gallactica."

This is the most peculiar form of television — kitsch married to insanely stoked acquisitiveness. "Price" is a pure distillate of TV commercialism: Where's room for humor in this formula?

And God forbid a host who is cynical, or snotty, or dismissive or sarcastic. Bob Barker went down well for a million years because he was the perfect automaton — a true believer in the cult that is "Price."

And so here is Drew Carey, who started Monday morning: Solid, block-like, he fills the screen with good humor, a black suit and horn-rimmed glasses that brings to mind SpongeBob Squarepants. He's not a fluid mover, but a deliberative one. He's not Bob Barker either, but then that's not the idea.

He's big on exclamation points, too. Drew doesn't like to leave things flat. He likes to pick up the most mundane "Price Is Rightian" phrase, pump it up full of air, then send it floating over the studio audience and out across the airwaves, to that invisible studio audience in the heartland. SPIRIT OF STEEL: Aubrey Ghent, cutter of jams and lawns, visits the Kennedy Center. COURTESY OF AUBREY GHENT

Songs of The South

Florida native Aubrey Ghent makes the lap-steel guitar sing

INSTRUMENT | He may be a minister, a master artist of the state of Florida and a lap-steel guitarist, but Aubrey Ghent still has to mow the lawn.

"I'm sorry — you know how it is when you get into the grass," he apologized after some sneezes got the better of him during the interview. From an early age, Ghent was surrounded by sounds of the lap-steel guitar: His uncle and father were innovators with the instrument, which was found in many Southern churches.

"My uncle and my father had left such a wide range of interest that folks were talking about [steel guitar] everywhere during that time. Me hearing it wouldn't have necessarily been from them," Ghent said. "My cousins were playing all around me, and others members of that church, the House of God, had started imitating, or some emulating, the steel guitar. It began to be a fad in the church at the time [the 1950s and on] because they loved the sound."

The lap-steel guitar's sound is quite different from the standard guitar's, and some commercial acts, most notably Ben Harper and Robert Randolph and the Family Band, make prominent use of it. "I think it's popular because of the voice-like qualities that it has and the way it sings — it really sings to you. It's the style that I inherited from my father that causes it to sing like a person, like a human voice," Ghent said.

Ghent began working with the instrument when he was 6 years old; by 9, he was performing in churches. Given his background and the religious overtones of his songs, performing for secular audiences is a different ballgame.

"When I first started doing secular venues, I would be very surprised at how they took it. ... I find it astonishingly unique the way that they look upon hearing the first song played," said Ghent. "It's from the method and the way that the songs are played — and, of course, everyone doesn't play the steel alike — but my style is of a nature where it would cause you to kind of sit up and take notice."

"I'm not saying that to be bragadocios, but it's really a unique style that my father handed down."

Air Grievances

Transportation

Frustrated executives are becoming pilots to avoid flight hassles

When a meeting with clients runs late, Andy Davidson doesn't have to worry that his plane will leave without him.

Instead of impatiently waiting in mile-long security lines or silently waging war over a shared airplane armrest, Davidson can walk straight to his own six-seater, climb into the cockpit and take off.

Davidson, the owner of a New York-based financial consulting business, is a member of a small but growing group of businessmen who have taken their passion for flying and turned it into a more convenient — if less economical — form of transportation.

Most of these executives either buy or lease small planes, called single-engine pistons, with seating room equivalent to a family sedan and the ability to fly up to about 1,000 miles. With many airlines cutting back flights to smaller destinations, small business owners and midlevel executives are realizing that flying themselves might actually be feasible.

According to the Federal Aviation Administration, the number of hours single-engine piston planes are flown each year is expected to rise 17 percent by 2020, with growth of about 1 percent per year.

Flying smaller planes — either by the executives themselves or the pilots they sometimes hire — has become so popular that it has begun to contribute to the nation's air traffic and congestion.

Certainly the benefits of private-plane travel are all too evident to anyone who's ever been bumped from an overbooked flight or waited for takeoff at rush hour. Executive pilot Steven Hall, the managing director of his own executive compensation consulting firm, said he leaves his house only 30 to 40 minutes before he plans to take off rather than the two hours he budgets to go through security lines when taking a commercial flight.

"Most of us who travel on business can tell stories of sitting on the ground for four hours waiting for the plane to be cleared for takeoff for what was supposed to be a 90-minute flight," Hall said.

Davidson agreed, saying that although the actual time in the air is about the same or possibly slightly longer in a private plane, flying yourself allows you to set your own schedule and makes for a much more relaxing trip.

"Any time I have to go on a commercial flight, it's a depressing feeling," Davidson said. "Between the check-in and the delays and the cattle-car feel of it, I think the whole experience has gone downhill."

For other businessmen, flying a plane can be even more of a necessity, noted Ed Bolen, president of the Washington D.C.-based National Andy Davidson, president of a financial management company, flies his Beechcraft Baron twin-engine plane.

Business Aviation Association.

"There are cases where there are companies either located in communities that have lost commercial air service or seen frequencies go down," he said. "Do they move the plant or facility, or find a transportation alternative?"

Richard Shine, who owns Manitoba Corp., a metal recycling business outside of Buffalo, N.Y., credits his plane with saving his business. Starting in the 1970s, companies in upstate New York that once provided scrap metal to Manitoba started moving their businesses elsewhere. To expand the company's supply base, Shine began using a small plane, in which he owned a half-interest, to find new suppliers.

Since then, the company has bought a bigger plane, and now makes the aircraft a major part of its marketing materials.

"We think of it as the same as having another sales person on staff," said Shine. "It costs about the same, but it doesn't complain and it's almost always willing to work." LAUREN SHEPHERD (AP)

The Silent Juggernaut

Business

Google is shaking up the advertising world while staying out of it

Like a gourmet chef who rarely eats out, Google feeds advertising services to hordes of other businesses while skimping on its own marketing.

The recipe has been extremely fruitful. While the Internet search leader has sold more than $30 billion in advertising since 2001, Google has become a household name without buying expensive ad campaigns.

"It's almost as if they have this cultural allergy to advertising," said Mark Hughes, author of "Buzzmarketing," a book about unconventional ways to build a brand. "It has been an advantage because it has helped keep them cool. They have zigged while everyone else has been zagging."

This advertising aversion has

Google Inc. has spent very little on advertising during its rapid rise on Wall Street.

freed up money for engineers, computing hardware and other resources that fuel Google's search engine, while leaving plenty of profit to keep shareholders happy.

Some marketing experts view Google as the archetype of an Internet-driven age that has made it possible for startups like YouTube, MySpace and Facebook to permeate pop culture with very little fanfare.

That's a change from the dot-com boom in 1999 and 2000, when Internet entrepreneurs went broke paying for Super Bowl ads and other theatrics in a mostly fruitless effort to stand out from the rest of the crowd.

The Mountain View, Calif.-based company believes its austere approach will become more common as major advertisers learn to deploy technology to target consumers.

"We are at an inflection point that could radically change the way marketing is done," said David Lawee, who became Google's marketing chief a year ago.

Some well-known companies are even more frugal advertisers than Google.

Starbucks Corp. spent just $95 million on advertising last year, 49 percent less than Google did. Like Google, Starbucks made a name for itself by developing a distinctive product that quickly resonated with consumers whose enthusiasm became infectious.

Google believes happy users are worth infinitely more than any goodwill advertising might buy, said marketing chief Lawee.

"If our products are great, our reputation soars," he said.

Google's brand also has been bolstered by the media's fixation on the company.

"They are at the crest of this wave that gives them a lot of free publicity," said Roland Rust, chairman of the University of Maryland's marketing department.

Industry experts say Google may have to invest more heavily in advertising as it branches in new directions.

It already is selling a suite of online software applications to businesses and reportedly is mulling lending its name to a line of mobile phones.

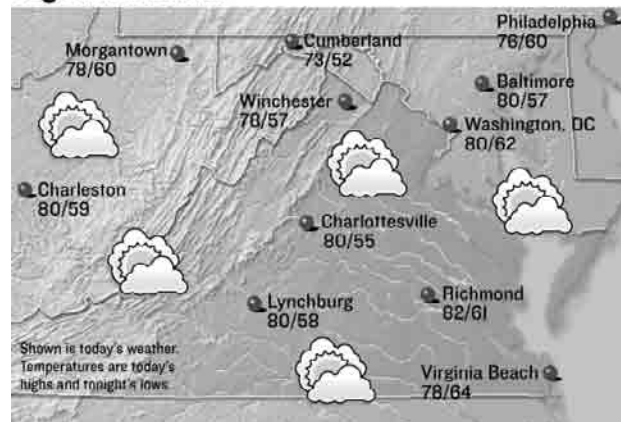

"It's inevitable that they will have to advertise more," said veteran marketing consultant Bob Kahn. "At some point, the power of the Google brand will cease to support all those extremities."

LADIES IN RED: Nicky's Chick collection includes playful tops, casual dresses and high-waisted pants. If Paris had been there, she would have called all the looks "hot."

A Classy Hilton

While Paris partied hard, her sis, Nicky, focused on designing Nicky Hilton stood in a corner, surrounded by cameras. But no bodyguard pressed for her escape.

The 23-year-old designer was holding court backstage Sunday at Smashbox Studios, where she unveiled her spring Chick by Nicky Hilton collection on the opening night of L.A. Fashion Week.

After making her New York Fashion Week debut last month with her high-end Nicholai line, Hilton was poised and demure as she gave interview after interview about Chick, the casual-wear label she launched in 2004.

"It's my first clothing line," she said. "So, it's my baby."

Aimed at girls and named for Hilton's childhood moniker ("My parents thought I looked like Tweety Bird"), the line features flirty minidresses, floaty tops, playful patterns and super-high hemlines.

"It's very cute, very girly, very feminine. It's very reflective of the L.A. lifestyle — laid-back, casual," she said.

Still, the line has evolved over its three years. "Before, it was a lot of sweatsuits, T-shirts and tank tops, but now I'm doing more denim and tops and dresses."

Punchy prints — delicate swans, glass slippers and bright red apples — define the spring collection. An apple-covered A-line dress is topped with a black belted trench coat. Swans decorate sundresses and slim-fitting shifts. Printed halters and tanks float over tiny shorts.

Solids make a statement in swingy T-shirt dresses, high-waisted "sailor trousers" and skinny jeans. The best offerings came in black, including a knee-length dress with ruffle sleeves, a scalloped hem and a white Peter Pan collar, and an airy voile top worn with wide-leg pants.

Though Sunday marked Hilton's second fashion week in as many months, she's not done yet. She is set to show Nicholai in Mexico City and Moscow in coming weeks.

The cameras are coming along, too. A crew from MySpace.com has been documenting the designer's work and plans to follow her on her international adventure for its fashion feature, "The Fit."

Still, Hilton seems humble about her international success.

"I'm excited," she said.

"I've never been to Mexico City or Russia, so just for me to be able to go there is fun."

Beauty

Love It or Leave It

The eponymous gal of Two Faced's LOVE LISA BEAUTY BATTLE BOX ($32.50, Sephora) is founder Jerrod Blandino's sister; she's fighting skin cancer, so 42 percent of sales go to the Melanoma Research Foundation. It's a useful little thing, unfolding to reveal four neutral eye shadows, two glosses and "face shimmer." But the latter is too light for all but the palest faces, showing up as white smudges on dark skin despite strenuous blending. HOLLY J. MORRIS (EXPRESS)

Skin Care

Taming of the Brow

Before trying Parissa's new MINI WAX STRIPS EYEBROW DESIGN KIT ($9, Parissa.com), we devised various explanations for the misshapen brows and blotchy skin we assumed would result. Surprisingly, however, the strips removed hair with minimal pain or irritation, obviating much need for the disturbingly blue, skin-soothing azulene oil. (Even more disturbing: the oil's "Caution: Avoid Contact with Eyes" warning. Does Parissa realize how close human eyes generally are to brows?) The strips' downfall is their size and shape — an inch long and stick-straight — which means you can either create perfect inverted V's or deal with lots of post-wax plucking. ERIN CLEMENTS RUSHING

Workplace Issues

Washingtonpost.com's “HOW TO DEAL” columnist was online Tuesday and discussed workplace issues.

The group I work for has a bad reputation for being inflexible know-it-alls. I came to the group from another organization and had heard the rumors. They aren't that bad, but how do I inform my group of the reputation they have out there?

Why would you want to do that? I can't see what you would have to gain. If you see room for improvement in the group's communica-

What do you do when your boss has a power issue and is doing everything possible to get a person to quit rather than firing him or her so he or she can't claim unemployment?
Would this person be you? If so, start looking for another job. And don't leave until you find one. In the meantime, lean upon your loved ones for support. If your boss' conduct gets truly outrageous, report it to his or her boss or to human resources.

The team I work on is very social both in and out of work. They have crossed the line many times on the things they say and do in these social settings, and I have told them so. Now I have been ostracized. I know how to network professionally and they are NOT doing that. What do I do?

Is this the culture of your larger organization or just your team? If it's just your team, chances are that you will distinguish yourself favorably by not going along with the inappropriate conduct. If this is a problem in your larger organization, this may not ultimately be the best fit for you.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) You may be asked by someone in charge to tone it down somewhat. This can be done without sacrificing anything of value; be cooperative.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) You'll very likely enjoy some added excitement in your life — but the source of that excitement may be unclear for some time yet.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) If what you believe is being threatened by someone you do not know well, make it clear that you are ready to walk away from the situation.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) Others may be surprised by the depth you display in a situation that others may take very lightly. Not everything is a joke to you.

Where are Redskins Fans?

I WANT TO EXPRESS my confusion and outrage over the majority's negative response to the Monday Poll Center question regarding the likelihood of the Redskins' making the playoffs. Never before have I ever lived in, or been to, for that matter, a city that does not overwhelmingly support its hometown football team as little as Washington. On game days in Baltimore or Pittsburgh, for example, you would be hard-pressed to find a home without its team's flag flying proudly out front or bars not filled with uniform-adorned fans who are glued to the television. In D.C., however, you are apparently hard-pressed to find a fan who supports the team enough to think it will even make the playoffs. That is truly sad.
